brought to a standstill in his flanking operasons. The consequence is that sharp shooting and skirmishing now make up the report of some that matters will remain pretty much as they now stand until the result of the Baltimore convention, which meets next Tresday, is mown. Should Lincoln receive the nomination, it is thought he will call for more troops, the vigor of the universal Yankee nation into sawed into timber at that place. the campaign. But it is hard to conjecture what course he will pursue in the event of his says: defeat before the convention. Whether he would continue to "" run the machine" as he found it, or whether he would be prompted by a desire to signalize the close of his Adminia. tration by the restoration of peate, is altogether conjectural. He is undoubtedly in a better osition just at this time to obtain a favorable treaty with the Confederate States than he ever will be again. Without knowing anything positively on the subject, we are inclised to the opinion that the South would be disposed to yield or grant commercial advantages to the nation first recognizing our independence, and a ratification of a favorable treaty of peace would greatly detract from the edium that must ever attach to Lancoun and his memory on account of the useless and inhuman war he has waged upon us. It would operate as a laged 58 years.
